What Investment Risk Is Right For You?

If you were at a racetrack, would you bet on a long shot—or the favorite?

In investing, many people go for the closest they can get to a sure thing. A new study shows over half the working women surveyed said they would take only the barest minimum risk—or none at all—to get a greater return on their money.

Why are women so conservative? "I'm just not a gambler" said 20 percent of the survey's respondents. Another 20 percent said they couldn't afford to lose anything. Some also cited age and inexperience as reasons for being very cautious.

How much risk can you afford to take? Since everyone has different financial aims, everyone has different risk levels. Before investing, know what your assets and debts are. Consider any big expenses that are coming up—or ending. What's the size of your bank account? Insurance policy? What resources can you count on in an emergency? How far ahead can you look? Answers to these questions can help determine your risk level.

Are there ways you can reduce investment risks? Yes. Find out as much as possible about an investment from a professional such as a stockbroker or mutual fund representative. Know the firm's reputation.

Don't put all your money in one investment. Spread it around. Mutual funds may own shares in 50 or more companies. Find out how easily the investment may be sold. If you need to sell quickly, you may need to take a loss if buyers aren't interested.

Is there such a thing as risk-free investment? Absolutely not. Even if your investment is insured by the government—such as a bank account—inflation eats away at it. However, you can take advantage of high interest rates and get a good return with low risk. Check out money market funds, for example. Right now, they're paying much more than most regular savings accounts.

You can't expect to make money without taking some risks. But an informed investor can take steps to see they are prudent ones. If you'd like a free list of money market mutual funds, please write to the Investment Company Institute, Dept. MM, 1775 K Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

NEWS Of Education

English-speaking Medical School In the Caribbean

There's promising news for American students who want to be doctors—and for Americans who need more doctors: the opening of a new medical school.

There may soon be more doctors around when you need one thanks to a new international, English-speaking medical school.

The new St. George's University School of Medicine, located on the islands of Grenada and St. Vincent, West Indies, is an international school—founded by Americans, with a faculty and student body representing over 23 countries.

Planned as a first-rate international medical university to provide a standard of education at least comparable with that of medical institutions in the U.S., St. George's University inaugurated medical classes in 1977.

By providing us with more American-trained physicians, this school in the Caribbean may make it possible for our doctors to make occasional house calls —and probably to live longer, too.

Will Be Starting For Longwood Tonight In Home Game

Connie Murray

Farmville - Longwood's women's basketball, gymnastics and wrestling teams return to action at home this week, after breaking for the Thanksgiving holiday.

The Lady Lancer cagers, 1-1 after a loss to strong Division One Virginia last Monday, resume action Tuesday night, hosting Hampton Institute. Norfolk State pays a visit Thursday night. Both games kick-off at 7:30 p.m. in French Gymnasium.

While the Lady Lancers got off to a strong start in their opening 76-58 win over Christopher-Newport November 17th, coach Carolyn Hodges was distressed with her team's play in the 69-38 loss to Virginia a week ago.

"We were scrappy against Virginia, but our passing was poor," said Hodges. "We didn't execute anything we had worked on offensively. Our experienced players made freshmen mistakes."

"Virginia has a good team, but there's no way we should have lost by 31 points," she continued. "We simply didn't play well."

While the overall team performance disappointed Hodges, the Longwood mentor was pleased with the play of guard Connie Murray (Pamplin). Murray, a 5-1 sophomore, sparked her team with 9 points, three assists and two steals. She led a shortlived Longwood comeback in the second half.

"I thought Connie played a super game," praised Hodges. "She handled the ball well and was able to penetrate their defense. Considering how much taller the Virginia guards were, she did very well."

Hodges will be looking for Murray to provide more spark when the Lady Lancers take on Hampton and Norfolk State this week. While Hampton is a VAIAW Division II Conference foe, Norfolk State may be among Longwood's toughest opponents of the season.

In early season statistics, senior Maryjane Smith, also of Pamplin, tops Longwood in scoring with a 15 ppg. average. Junior Brenda Fetterow (Indian Harbor Beach, Fla.) is second with an average of 11.5 points and leads the team in steals with seven. Sophomore Amy Gates (Fairfax) is the leading rebounder with seven rpg mark and is scoring 6.5 points per contest. Murray has hit 57 per cent of her attempts from the floor to lead the team in field goal percentage.

Kerry Richardson Is Aspiring Young Boxer

Kerry Richardson has chosen the hardest sport of all sports. The young Appomattox County High School graduate punishes himself four nights a week, three hours a stint, at the Fraternal Order of Police boxing gym.

Kerry, in the eye's of five trainers in the gym, is certainly one of the most aspiring and dedicated young boxers in the gym. His ultimate goal is to bring the first senior boxing championship medal back to Appomattox. He could well be the first Appomattox boxer ever to attain this goal.

Kerry has had the opportunity to spar with some of the best amateur boxers in Virginia and has spent considerable time in the ring with professional boxer Al Yashick, number 1 rated pro in Virginia Heavyweight Division who is scheduled to fight Michael Spinks early in 1980. Kerry will make his boxing debut at Lynchburg City Armory December 8th at 8 p.m. if a suitable opponent is found.

Raiderettes Lose Basketball Opener

The Raiderettes played a good first half but the offense fell apart in the third quarter as E. C. Glass posted a 52 -28 win over the Appomattox girls in their season opener.

The Raiderettes were handicapped by the loss of starting center, Robin Martin, who is out with a broken ankle, however Karen Johnson did a commendable job in that spot.

Appomattox fell behind 3 - 10 in the first period as Annette Carter made the lone field goal for the visitors, but they outscored the Lynchburg team 15 - 14 in the second quarter to go into the locker room trailing by 6 points at the half.

Glass pulled away in the third period with a 16 - 2 splurge and kept the momentum with 12 markers in the final stanza while the Raiderettes scored 8 points.

Annette Carter led the Appomattox girls with 11 points followed by Ruby Smith who came off the bench to score 5 points.

Appomattox held the edge in rebounds and was led by Susan Handy (9) and Carter (6).
